

Vijay D. Songire

(Assistant Professor, St. John College of Humanities and Sciences, Palghar, Maharashtra)

Turn The Dark into The Light

I feel for those who never see,
The true meaning of life, so free.
In ignorance, they twist and fight,
Lost in shadows, far from light.
Life offers chances, wide and bright,
But many miss them, out of sight.
Untouched by grace, they stand aside,
Unaware of what's meant to guide.
Instead, they gossip, laugh, and play,
Spreading half-truths along the way.
The cost of lies, they fail to see,
As honesty fades, once held with glee.
Yes, perseverance, loyalty, too,
Are hard to practice, this is true.
But in their strength, life's worth is found,
In justice fair, where hearts are bound.
The soul that seeks the common good,
Endures the storms, as it should.
It's not enough to be just kind,
Loyalty must be redefined.
For kinship's love may bring some peace,
But loyalty's strength must never cease.
The road is tough, the burdens great,
Yet it's the struggle that forms fate.
In helping those with hearts so torn,
We see the light in them reborn.

Sufferings come, as they must be,
Yet they may bring new clarity.
So rise and fight, stand firm and true,
For life's real meaning lies in you.
When morals guide, when hearts take flight,
We turn the dark into the light.